How to write poetry analysis essay

Students are often given the assignment of writing a rhetorical analysis, in which they must analyze how a speaker makes an argument, and evaluate whether or not they do so effectively. However, this practice is useful not only for students, but for all of us who want to evaluate everyday arguments—whether they’re made by advertisers, politicians, or our friends—and learn to think more critically on our own. What Is a Rhetorical Analysis? A rhetorical analysis is an essay that examines and evaluates a text (or sometimes other types of media, such as video) based on its rhetoric. Rather than focusing on what the actual message is, a rhetorical analysis looks at how that message is created and delivered. In writing your rhetorical analysis, you’ll examine the author or creator’s goals, techniques, and appeals to their audience (which you’ll summarize in your essay’s thesis). How to Write a Rhetorical Analysis Follow these 6 steps to write a rhetorical analysis that’s clear and insightful. 1. Identify the 4 elements of rhetoric. Start your analysis by taking note of the following rhetorical elements: Audience: Who is the piece intended for? Depending on the medium being used, the audience might consist of readers, spectators, listeners, or viewers. What might you infer about this audience and their backgrounds (age group, political preferences, etc.)? Purpose: What is the speaker’s purpose? What is the outcome that they wish or intend to incite? What are they trying to convince their audience of? Medium: How is the message being delivered? Through writing, video, images, audio, or some other medium? Context: Consider the time, place, and social climate of when the material was originally produced. What else was going on during that time? 2. Describe the rhetorical appeals. Identify and describe the rhetorical appeals used by the speaker, as well as other devices, such as tone, syntax, imagery, etc. The 3 main rhetorical appeals, established by Aristotle, are ethos, pathos, and logos. They describe how the speaker appeals to an audience’s ethics, emotions, and logic, respectively. This can be done in a number of ways, including imagery, anecdotes, examples, or specific data. 3. Analyze. Next, it’s time to analyze how and why the speaker uses those devices to appeal to their audience. As noted above, there are many ways for a speaker to use these devices and appeals. Analyze which methods they chose, how they applied them, and why you think they chose them. 4. Evaluate. Finally, evaluate the author’s success in using these techniques to reach their goals. Do you think they were effective? Why or why not? If you don’t think they were effective, what effect do you think they will have instead on the audience? Your evaluation is important because it will become your main argument, or thesis. 5. State your thesis. Now that you’ve completed your analysis of the material, try to summarize it into one clear, concise thesis statement that will form the foundation of your essay. Your thesis statement should summarize: 1) the argument or purpose of the speaker; 2) the methods the speaker uses; and 3) the effectiveness of those methods. For example: In [Title of the Work], the author convincingly argues in favor of education reform by using specific data, compelling anecdotes, and her experience as a teacher. 6. Organize your ideas and evidence. Next, using your thesis statement as a foundation, organize your ideas and evidence into a coherent outline. For example, you might organize your body paragraphs into 3 categories: one paragraph for each of the rhetorical appeals (ethos, pathos, and logos), with specific examples of how the speaker makes those appeals. How Do You Write a Rhetorical Analysis Introduction? The introduction to your rhetorical analysis essay doesn’t need to be too lengthy or detailed. However, there are a few things you should introduce before jumping into your analysis. You should start with some contextual information, so your reader can understand what kind of material you’ll be analyzing. Be sure to reference the title, the writer/speaker, and any other relevant details about the work (this can include the year it was published, or background information about what was going on at that time). Then, you should state your thesis, which will explain what you’ll be arguing in your essay. From there, you can transition into the main body of your analysis. Rhetorical Analysis Outline The following outline is an example of how you could structure your rhetorical analysis. To make planning your essay easier, you can simply copy and paste this outline and fill it in with your thesis and supporting examples. Introduction Describe the 4 elements of rhetoric (audience, purpose, medium, and context), and identify the speaker State your thesis Body Paragraph #1: Ethos Describe how the speaker makes an appeal to ethos (the audience’s sense of ethical responsibility) Use specific examples, referring to word choice, tone, anecdotes, and other devices Body Paragraph #2: Pathos Describe how the speaker makes an appeal to pathos (the audience’s emotions) Use specific examples, referring to word choice, tone, anecdotes, and other devices Body Paragraph #3: Logos Describe how the speaker makes an appeal to logos (logic) Use specific examples, referring to word choice, tone, anecdotes, and other devices Conclusion Rephrase your thesis Leave your audience with a call to action, or something to think about (this could be a question, or a parting thought) How Many Words Should a Rhetorical Analysis Be? There’s no strict rule for how many words your rhetorical analysis should be, although you might be given specific guidelines by your instructor. In general, however, these essays aren’t very long, ranging anywhere from 500-1,000 words. The important thing is that your analysis is complete and you adequately support your thesis. Analyzing Rhetoric Analyzing rhetoric is one way to evaluate the work of other writers and creators, and it can also show you new strategies for making your own arguments more effectively. Next time you read an article or listen to a speech, don’t just pay attention to what the author or speaker says, but how they say it. This is an important step in critical thinking that will help you to draw your own conclusions and evaluate different forms of media more critically. Did you find this post helpful? The difficult comes in as many people may think a song is music but not, should be like poetry. Music adds another layer of meaning to a song as it is full of literary devices and figurative language. Do not just pay attention to the lyrics alone when writing an essay about a song. Melody in a song just tries to modify the meaning played along with the words. A song should have good language since it can also deliver a message. here is how to write a song analysis paper Steps to guide you when writing a song analysis essay Take time and Listen to the song a few times. Do not think too much about stylistic specifics rather take few minute to listen to the song then write down how the song affects you. Discuss the feeling that you get from the song. Discuss the central theme or the message you get. For you to scrutinize the song lyrics more closely get a printout of your song. Consider how the words have been literally scoured, their use, and their effect to the meaning and feel of the song. A songwriter can communicate frustration using song lyric over being down played in a certain deal. Listen to the song again with your list of lyric observations in front of you. Check how the music lines are relating with words. Analyze how the song details enrich the meaning of the lyrics and contribute to the effects of poetic devices as you take notes. Research the historical, social and political context of the song. Check if your music is displaying a life experience, world events and the knowledge within, and prevailing attitudes. This might affect your interpretation in quite a big way. Within the context of the entire album, take the song and study it carefully. Analyze if the artist chose a deliberate progression of songs to convey a message as you closely look at the order of the tune and the words used. Using the observations you’ve gathered, look for a common thread that ties them together. Link your detailed observations to connect your general impression of the song with detailed that you have gathered. The thesis of your essay is in the conclusion part. Identify a specific example that you’ll use to support your argument. Eliminate some content to check out the length of your essay. Using the regular conventions of essay writing and factor in any special instructions that you have been given, draft your paper. Briefly state your thesis and make an outline your main arguments in the introduction. In the body of your essay discuss your main points. Finally proof read your work.
